

ALUMNI:

FRENCH: Since 1992, 52% of students graduating with a major in French have pursued graduate study at such prestigious institutions as Georgetown University, Medical College of South Carolina, American University, School for International Training in Brattleboro, VT, University of Pennsylvania, Loyola University in Chicago. They have pursued degrees in fields such as International Development, International Affairs, French, International Business, Politics, Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages. Graduates of the French program at High Point University are pursuing careers in a variety of fields.

Tabatha Davis, who graduated in 2010 with a major in French and Biology is pursuing medical studies at the Medical College of South Carolina.

Jacob Warner, who graduated in 2006 with a major in French and Biology, is in medical school at Duke University.

Kurtis Eckard, a 2005 graduate with a double major in French and International Business, works in Berlin, Germany, where he is employed by Corning and handles accounts with France and England.

Mario Gonzalez, a 2005 graduate in French and International Business, works for ICG Commerce, a procurement company in PA.

Aissa Yaye Habi, a 2005 graduate of International Business with a minor in French, completed a Masters in International Business at Florida International University.

Anush Djanants, a 2003 graduate in French and International Business, is employed with BB&T University, where she conducts seminars on retirement investing.

Heidi Fischer, a 2003 graduate in French and International Business, completed a Masters degree in International Politics at American University and is employed at the Bryan School of Business at UNC-G, where she advises international business majors and advises students who study abroad.

Rebecca (Roehrich) Vincent, a 2003 graduate with a triple major in French, International Studies and Modern Languages, completed a Masters in Conflict Resolution at George Mason University and is employed in the Office of International programs at UNC-Charlotte, where she also teaches a course on International Peace and Conflict Management.

Amora Williams, a 2003 graduate in French and International Studies, obtained a Master of Arts in Teaching-Secondary Education at American University.

Heidi Edsall, a 1999 graduate in French and Interior Design, served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Morocco for their years before completing a Masters degree in TESOL (Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages) at the School for International Training in Brattleboro, VT.

Tina Ranalli, who graduated in 1998 with a major in French and International Business worked for several years at Ciba in Delaware before completing her PhD in French language and literature in June 2010 at the University of Pennsylvania, where she now serves as Assistant Professor of French.

SPANISH:

Many graduates of Spanish have gone right into the workforce, using their degrees in a variety of fields. Others have enrolled in masters and doctoral programs in fields such as International Development, Spanish, International Business, Foreign Language Education, Public Health at such prestigious universities as American University, Thunderbird School of International Management, Wake Forest University, University of Southern Arizona, University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

KiYonna Brown, a 2009 graduate in Spanish and Human Relations, is enrolled in both the MBA program and the MA program in Healthcare Administration at Pfeiffer University in Charlotte, NC.

Brooke Hayworth, a 2007 graduate in Spanish with K-12 certification, is now teaching Spanish at Ledford High School in Davidson County, NC.

Seon McLaughin, also from the class of 2007, is currently finishing a master's degree in ESOL (English for Speakers of Other Languages) at Salem College.

Megan Russell, a 2006 graduate in Spanish and Home Furnishings Marketing, is employed by England, Inc. as a merchandising assistant.

Gabriel Allison, of the class of 2006, graduated with degrees in Spanish and Human Relations and taught English in Madrid for a year. He is now teaching English in South Korea.

Anna Draughan, a 2003 graduate in Business with a Spanish minor, completed a Masters degree in Spanish at UNC-G and is now teaching in Greensboro.

Yelena Markelova, a 2002 graduate in International Studies with a minor in Spanish, completed her Masters degree in International Development at American University and went on to work in La Paz, Bolivia, with Project Concern International, a San Diego-based organization that focuses on health education, income generation and youth work.

